Hongkong, March 19th, 1873.

WHILE considering it our duty to note with out delay the removal of the small-pox patients to the Civil Hospital, we deemed it right, as the matter was of so much import until we were in possession not only of the facts, but, if possible, of some kind of explanation of them.

We now understand that the exact state of the matter is as follows. With a view to saying the fees, which amount in the course of a year to some $200, usually paid to the health officer for visiting the patients at Stone-cutters' .Island, it appears that Dr. sed the two defendants and her things; she struction, the present case would be met by McCov, the new Colonial-Surgeon, determined on reverting to the old system of placing the patients in a matshed near the Civil Hospital. At the time when this decision was arrived at, there were three patients at Stone-cutters' Island, and these were in took the old man to find the two defendants; in Taipingshan spread a piece of white cloth consequence brought over to be placed in Dr. McCox's matshed. They were, it appears, as noticed by our evening contemporary, in a convalescent state, and we believe this fact is pleaded in extenuation of what might otherwise be not unjustly regarded as an act little short of inhumanity. Of this, at least in any severe sense, the Colonial-Surgeon cannot be accused, though it may be held to be at least not very kindly and considerate to remove men weakened by severe illness her house was the third house from Queen's from a quiet and healthy place to matcheds creeted in a populous part of the town, and which can hardly be deemed to form a suitable domicile for patients suffering from so serious a malady. The fact, however, that the men were convalescent, is in one point of give the defendants 60 cash to carry ber luggage view the chief reason for not removing them, as it is precisely at that stage that the disease is most infectious. Taking this view of the subject, therefore, it seems a most wanton disregard of the public safety that the measures in question should have been that the complainant was following, and wait. Unlike many other such vagaries, the squandering of the public money which was made in Praya. building the gaol at Stone-cutters' Island has been of some little use, and has at all events provided in a quiet and out of the way spot an excellent sanitarium for small-pox patients. The Civil Hospital is avowedly different localities of the city, so much so and instructed Sergeant Ayow, of the situated in a very unfavourable position—it that carriages could not pass, or passers-by Police Force, to make enquiries. The of orders he could see was in the one stancheon is in the midst of a bad atmosphere, arising from the native town below it; is anything but quiet; and above all, is so situated that the disease may spread with the greatest rapidity. Yet for the sake of what seems to be nothing more than a piece of professional etiquette, the Colonial Surgeon has seen fit to remove the patients from the one spot to the other. It may be recollected that two years ago, when it was discovered that the small-pox a hay with obstructing Peddar's wharf at 9.15 glass, and not a conver one, Abee said he with these orders. AN AMERICAN MURDERESS. A most extraordinary and terribles career of 26 boxes Rhubarb, each 1 picul; 2,358 boxes crime has been brought to light in America, through the voluntary confession, by Lydia Shermin, of New Haven, Connecticut, that she has been guilty of an almost unprecedented series of diabolical murders. The astounding story in the New York Herald of the 18th inst. would appear to be almost incredible were it not that the facts contained therein are strongly confirmed by circumstances. The woman had been tried and convicted for causing the death of her third husband, Mr. Sherman; but, as she was only found guilty of marder in the second degree, the sentence pronounced upon her on the 12th inst. was one of imprisonment for life, Judge Sunford, who tried her, at the same time intimating his regret that he | 85 oases Tobacco; 91 cases Medicines; 57 pkgs. could not send her to the confloid instead of to Irenware; 30 bdis. While there she became acquainted with her "first victim," Mr. Edward Struck to whom she was married shortly afterwards. They then went to Yorkville, where Struck worked at his trade as a carriage blackemith, and where she had her first child. Afterwards they lived at New York and other places together for about fourteen years, several children being born. Struck then joined the police force, and was sent to Manhattanville, where the prisoner encountered what she called her "first trouble," as Struck was discharged from the force on a charge of cowardice. The man after this declined to try and get any work and would lie in bed for weeks together, declining to see a doctor, and saying that he was not Finally he appeared to go out of his mind, and at last, acting on the advice of a pollie sergeaut with whom the woman had formed an acquaintance, she resolved upon " putting him out of the way." children, in the following terms: "My bushand at the time was getting worse and worse, and I was tempted to go and buy arsenic. I came home and made some catment gruel, and put in it about half a thimbleful of arsenic, and stirred it in well. Then I gave it to my husband to drink, and he drank of several times during the afternoon. He was then taken sick, with purging. I sent for Dr Juckson, of Carmansville, and he came in the evening. He asked Mr. Struck how he felt, but he did not speak to him. The doctor stayed a short time and left with me two white powders, and told me to give them to him during the night. When the doctor went hway I went with him to the door, and asked if he thought Mr. Struck was very dangerous. He said that he was very sick, that he thought he had softening of the brain, and that he would never get well again. That night he was very bad, and I was no with him all the time. Towards morning he began to fail very fast, and about eight o'clock in the morning be died. It was in May this occurred, and I continued to keep house. I was much discouraged and downbearted. I ga them only a little poison at a time, and after I gave it to them I was afraid they would die and sent for Dr. Oviatt. When he came he told me that they had the gastric fever, and he doctored them for a few days. Then I sent for Dr. Jackson. He told me that they were very sick, and he thought they would not live. Next morning Martha Ann died. She was taken with vomiting scon after I gave berthe arsenic, and was afflicted in that way until she died, The doctors said nothing to indicate that they knew what was the matter. Edward was affected in the same manner. He was sick at the stomach and vomited frequently. In the evening Edward died. He was a beautiful boy, and did not complain during his illness. The doctors had no suspicion in this case either, and I did not hear of any one naming any. I continued to keep house, and had with me four children at the time. I got work by nursing. SONG. My Love is altogether fair, . My own true stedfast Love; O. hav no sorrow come to her-Dear tender nestling dove ; Within the garden of my heart She doth divinely tread; Fuir are the flowers beneath her feet, And bright the sun o'er head. O. I would gladly die the death For that sweet stedfast Love; To shield from harm, to spare her pain-My tender nestling dove : Our thoughts ascend the lofty blue, Where God's dear song birds soar; But low on earth I kneel to tell How deeply I adore.

BREAK NOT THE CHAIN, BY J. W. THIBLWALL. Who reunites a broken chain, Will find it prone to part again; Its outward show appear as one, Tho' inward sympathy be gone : Break not the chain, break not chain, All jealous fears and whims restrain. Oh ! sever not two loving hearts,

From out the fracture love departs, And with the wind fleets o'er the main, No art can lure him back again. Break not the chain, break not the chain, All jealous fear and whim restrain. Pluck not the blos om from the tree, Twill pine and wither silently. And on the stem will bloom do more, No wind revive, no sun restore.

THE GENERAL POST. We have unlearnt the respectable but undevil was universal, and the world became a bouses, you may generally sec, not keeping his eyes fixed restlessly on his that the prevailing notions of a given period they were taken out of the play of Romea as at Paster or at the end of August, Fashion them distorted into grotesque shapes, with a cleaks, clinging to the iron bars of one of the company may be seen rising in disorder and uniformity resembling the symptoms of epi- lower windows, making love, with the ripple rushing for-one another's places. - Saturday

TURKISH NOTES. A correspondent in the Levant writes :-"I send you a couple of cases illustrating like structure. It was, when completed, put up in England, and then taken to pieces for conveyance to Constantinople, where it was re-erected and covered in with glass, and formed one of the most conspicuous and ed, and the debris of a building, which from first to last must have cust more than £100,000, has been sold for old scrap iron The other story is still more strange. The dered a new and gorgeous Imperial residence and more modern one; but alas! whether hi impatience or ardour got the better of hi dignity is not related, but on crossing th threshold he stumbled and fell. The omer was of too serious a character to be lost or an Oriental mind. The Sultan retraced hi steps, sent for the architect, and commanded Thistic that the gorgeous and magnificent edifite Zehra should be razed to the ground. The genuleman in question in despair repaired to the Grand Vizier, who failed to obtain a revocation of the order, but as as dernier ressort proceeded to the English Ambassador, who at once pointed out to his Majesty how ridiculous such an act would make him appear before the civilised world. This, with other arguments, saved the place, but the evil eye Billiqueuse is supposed still to rest on it, as it remains | Monocacy empty."-Liverpoot Albion.
